 - A core heavy-haul rail network for India including DFC lines, feeder lines and other IR lines that might form part of the core heavy-haul network including an optimum program for staging the physical construction of infrastructure and provision of transport services on the core system;
 - Traffic movement and train operating and service strategies to derive the maximum competitive advantage from heavy-haul rail capability;
 - The current costs and financial performance of freight traffic segments, including commodities and key routes, and the opportunities for improving train operating efficiencies, reducing traffic costs and improving financial performance through the heavy-haul proposals;
 - Market-based rail freight pricing strategies that may better serve both freight customers and service providers and contribute to the maximum profitable exploitation of the capabilities of heavy-haul; also the corresponding tariff regulatory/ appeal arrangements which may be necessary to protect user and public interests;
 - The financing needs and broad commercial returns of the recommended heavy-haul rail program (infrastructure and rolling stock), the key risks to the recommended program and its successful performance, and possible mitigation measures, if any;
 - An effective long-term Commercial and Marketing Plan which describes all necessary and sufficient elements needed to deliver the recommended network and services, and to attract the freight markets and volumes identified, the key decisions and decision-makers, and actions and actors, and other material aspects, with a timeline to 2030.
